The plastic bank. Using plastic to change the world

You can't change everything in the world, but the key to changing some things is in front of you. It's in the plastic cup and the plastic bottle of fizzy drink on your desk. These containers are often thrown in the rubbish at the end of the day because they aren't considered important.

However, one man, David Katz, thinks plastic is an important tool for social and environmental change. He's using his organization, The Plastic Bank, to make that happen. Right now, someone is throwing an empty packet of crisps or a plastic bottle onto a beach. Somewhere else, the wind is blowing plastic bags and boxes into the ocean. Last year, the oceans were polluted by about 7 million tons of plastic, mainly because rubbish was left on beaches. The problem of plastic litter is the worst in countries like Colombia and Peru.

Using 3D printing, The Plastic Bank will turn plastic litter into products to help people in these countries. How? The organization opens a collection bank with a 3D printer. People collect plastic and bring it to the bank. The plastic waste is recycled and the people are given credit for it. The credit is then exchanged for items like food and clothes, or it's used to pay for the 3D printing of tools, water filters and other things to improve life in their communities. The more people collect, the better their lives will be. Any donation of time or money is appreciated. Help The Plastic Bank make the world a better place today.
