DIGITAL DETOX

Digital devices are everywhere in our lives these days. Many of us are addicted to them. There are new studies every day about the dangers to our health of spending too much time in front of our small screens. Children are not exercising; people are worrying about their body image because of online pressure; and people are being bullied by cyber-criminals. In a study of 1,000 adults in Japan, researchers found that half of the participants were addicted to their smartphones. They were unaware of their smartphone dependence. The study called for people to try "digital detox". Digital detox means switching off from the Internet to enjoy "real life". It involves the old custom of talking to people face to face and doing normal everyday things. A digital detox organisation in Japan said: "We want detox to be a catalyst for people to rethink their distance from their devices...to get enough rest." People should rely less on devices to avoid the new phenomenon of "nomophobia" – NO MOBILE PHOBIA. A psychologist warned of the dangers of being too absorbed in smartphones. She said people who ignore their responsibilities because of being online should try a digital detox.
